44. XYZ company imports red paint made in Japan, and enters and pays duty on the paint. XYZ also buys the same red paint made in Toledo, Ohio. XYZ uses the red paint for its manufacture of toy fire engines, which it exports to China and sells domestically in the U.S. The Japanese paint is poured into a vat for use in the west side of the factory. The paint from Ohio is put into a vat for use by the east side. This separation of the paint is due only to the timing of the paint deliveries. The paint from Ohio and the paint from Japan are identical. The toy fire engines produced on the east and west side of the factory are also identical and are all sent to a central shipping area via conveyor belt to be boxed and shipped. Once the toys arrive in this area, they are packaged and boxed for shipping to China and cities in the U.S. without regard to which side of the factory produced them.

Based on the above facts, and assuming all statutory and regulatory requirements are met, XYZ may be able to claim what type of duty drawback on the red paint used to paint the exported toy fire trucks?

- A. Rejected merchandise drawback
- B. Finished petroleum derivatives drawback
- C. Direct identification unused merchandise drawback

Category XIII – Free Trade Agreements

71. Are Brazilian V-belts that are classified in HTSUS 3926.90.55 eligible for Generalized System of Preference (GSP) benefits and why?

- A. No, because A+ is the special program indicator (SPI) for the Automotive Products Trade Act (APTA) and not GSP.

72. Do the Singapore Free Trade Agreement (SGFTA) rules of origin (ROOs) provide for a good to originate as “exclusively from originating materials” and why?

- A. Yes, because the SGFTA is a “tariff shift model” free trade agreement, and like all such FTAs, they provide an “exclusively from originating materials” ROO.
- B. No, because among our “tariff shift model” free trade agreements, the SGFTA is unique or nearly unique in that it does not have an “exclusively from originating materials” ROO.
- C. No, because Singapore is a small country and like other small countries with which we have FTAs, its program relies upon a regional value content + substantial transformation ($RVC + ST \times 100 \geq 35\%$) ROO to determine origination.
- D. Yes, because the “wholly obtained or produced” ROO and “exclusively from originating materials” ROO mean exactly the same thing.

- B. Yes, because the KORUS allows originating goods to enter the commerce of a third country without losing originating status as long as they are not further processed.
- C. No, because the KORUS does not allow originating goods to enter the commerce of a third country without losing originating status.
- D. Yes, because the KORUS allows originating goods to be further processed in another country as long as the processing is merely a finishing operation that does not result in a change in tariff classification.
- F. Yes, because the KORUS allows originating goods to be further processed in another country as long as the processing is not greater than the 10% permissible under de minimis.

74. Blooming potted hyacinths in HTSUS 0601.20.90 are grown in Canadian hot houses from Dutch bulbs classified in HTSUS 0601.10.30 and subsequently imported into the U.S. The value of the Dutch bulbs is 15% of the customs value of the potted hyacinths. Can the hyacinths enter the commerce of the U.S. duty free under the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and why?

- A. Yes, because this is an allowable tariff shift.
- B. Yes, because although this is not an allowable tariff shift, by application of the de minimis exception, the blooming potted hyacinths remain NAFTA eligible.
- C. No, because HTSUS 0601.20.90 is ineligible for NAFTA Canada.
- D. Yes, because the NAFTA's "Exceptions to Change in Tariff Classification Rules" allows horticultural goods to originate even if grown from non-originating bulbs, seed, cuttings, etc.
- E. No, because live plants with soil attached to roots cannot be imported into the U.S., much less benefit from NAFTA.

The importer indicates that the basis of appraisal is transaction value based upon a sale of merchandise to the importer from the unrelated manufacturer M. The importer pays a royalty to Company A for the right for manufacturer M to use patented technology in the production of the gas turbines in China. After importation, the imported gas turbines are used in the production of other goods in the United States using a patented technology for which the importer pays Company B for the right to use. The contract between the manufacturer and the importer makes no reference to either Company A's or Company B's patented technology, or the royalty payments to the companies. Which of the following describes the dutiable status of the royalty payments and the reason for that status is?

- A. The royalty payment to the Company A is dutiable; the royalty payment to Company B is not dutiable. Company A's patented technology is necessary to produce the imported goods. Company B's patented technology goes to the right to use technology in the United States and the imported gas turbines are not the subject of the royalty agreement.
- B. The royalty payment to the Company A is dutiable; the royalty payment to Company B is dutiable. Both Company A's and Company's B patented technology relate to the imported goods.
- C. The royalty payment to Company A is not dutiable; the royalty payment to Company B is not dutiable. The contract between the manufacturer M and the importer does not mention the patented technology or royalty payments.
- D. The royalty payment to the Company A is not dutiable; the royalty payment to Company B is dutiable. The contract between the manufacturer M and the importer does not mention Company A's patented technology. Company B's patented technology is used in further production using the imported goods.
- E. None of the above.

78. Upon importation, an importer inspected its merchandise, women's shirts, and noted that the shirts were made of 98% cotton instead of 100% cotton, and that the sizing ran small and did not match what was listed on the sewn-in label. The merchandise was entered under 6206.30.30, HTSUS and duty paid. The importer's buyer in the United States rejected the merchandise because it was not what the buyer ordered. The importer ultimately sold the merchandise to a discounted clothing store at 10% of what the original buyer agreed to pay. The importer requested a full refund of duties paid on the merchandise claiming it was defective. Which of the following is the best description of what the importer is entitled to in this situation?

- A. The importer is not entitled to any refund of duties under the law.
- B. The importer is entitled to a full refund of duties as the merchandise is not what the importer paid for.
- C. The importer is entitled to a full refund of duties because the merchandise is essentially worthless.
- D. The importer is entitled to a partial refund of duties. The merchandise should be appraised in its condition as imported, with an allowance made in the value to the extent of the damage.
- E. The importer is not entitled to a refund of duties because no allowance or reduction of duties may be made for ad valorem duties paid.

79. ACME, a U.S. Company, purchases 100 machines from a company in Japan. ACME will make an initial down payment for the machines. Once the machines are made, ACME will make another payment. The Japanese company ships the machines to the United States on a Free on Board (FOB) basis. Once the goods are entered into the United States, ACME will make another payment to the Japanese company. What charges would NOT be included in the dutiable value of the machines?

- A. As a part of the price of the machines, the invoice from the Japanese company, presented to CBP when the merchandise is entered into the United States, includes a charge to transport the machines from Nagano to Toyko, Japan so that they could be shipped to the United States.
- B. ACME hires its sister company in Boise, Idaho and pays them to develop design plans and technical know-how and to furnish them to the Japanese company free of charge for making the machines more efficient.
- C. The sales agreement indicates that if the machines are delivered on time, the Japanese company will receive a bonus payment.
- D. One of ACME's customers in the United States wants modifications made to the machines. These modifications must be made at the time of production, resulting in a higher cost to make the machines. ACME does not have the funds to pay the Japanese company for the extra costs of the modification and the Japanese company will not produce machines with the modification without first receiving payment for increased production costs, so ACME has its customer send a payment to the Japanese company for the additional costs of the modifications.
- E. To ensure that the goods are safely shipped to the United States, ACME hires a company who charges ACME a fee to load the machines onto pallets and bubble wrap them for delivery to the United States.
